

The first weekend in May, the arena of Axevalla outside Skara in Sweden, were filled up with fresh cattle and 16 cutters who wanted to learn more about cutting and especially about the necessity to work as a team. Except for the actual rider, the herdholders and turnbacks has to know exactly what to do to help the rider get the best go. The clinic at Axevalla could not get better. All the riders were very pleased,

bY

MIA KRISTOFFERSSON
PHOTO TOMAS ÖLANDER

Josh & Amy King

- in Sweden for a "team clinic"

16 riders attended the "team clinic" at Axevalla with Josh and Amy King. They came from all over Scandinavia.

Josh helping Ulf Tullberg with the ques.

From left, Josh King, the back of Torbjörn Johansson (we believe), Michael Kalén, Martin Langels and Göran Lindsröm

Arild from Norway need his turnback.

Josh and Amy King is in Sweden for their second time. The first clinic they held was such a success for the Scandinavian cutters so Michael Kalén responsible for the clinic, invited the King couple back to Sweden for a second one. CowSense.se got a short interview with Michael Kalén after the second almost even more successful clinic with Josh and Amy King.

When we are asking why Michael choosed to invite King's the answer is simple, but not short. First of all they are really good on what they are doing. Both of them ride, train and compete in cutting. They are, upon that, both educated NCHA-judges, Amy is a AAA-judge and Josh are a AAAA-judge and he is also a board member of the NCHA Judges Committee. And even though it doesn't say much about their own skills, but still it is a fantastic detail to tell, Amys grandfather is none other than Buster Welsh. And maybe that also puts a perspective to Josh and Amys heritage and choice of work and life.

The clinic

The choice of arena for this clinic were easy to make. An almost outstanding offer with uncountable numbers of cattle and panels at the spot, made it a pleasure to choose Axevalla. Part from that it's also situated in the middle of it all. Attenders of the clinic came from all places in Sweden and even from Norway. The team focus of the clinic attracted of course most of all the ones who has intension of competing upcoming season, but Michael clarifying that this wasn't the main goal with the clinic. Everyone was invited either you are in the middle, the end or in the beginning of your career as a cutter. And four of the attenders of the clinic were only there to learn about herdholding and turnbacking.

Another success

The clinic at Axevalla could not got better. All the riders were very pleased, the cattle were extremely fresh and many and Josh and Amy worked well with different parts and different riders to put togheter a perfect team for a good go at the cutting arena. As any other good trainers they set the level for degree of difficulty for each rider so everyone could get the most out of the clinic.

Michael who is responsible for arranging clinics in the name of NCHA of Scandinavia was really happy about how it all worked out, grateful for all the knowledge Josh and Amy delivered and thankful to all the riders who really worked hard togheter, before, during and after the clinic.

Each and everyone with the same goal, to put Scandinavia on the map of good cutters.

Josh and Amy explaining some fundamentals.